Protect Your Privacy When Job-hunting Online

Identity theft and identity fraud are terms used to refer to all types of crime in which someone wrongfully obtains and uses another person's personal data in some way that involves fraud or deception, typically for economic gain.

The numbers associated with identity theft are beginning to add up fast these days. A recent General Accounting Office report estimates that as many as 750,000 Americans are victims of identity theft every year. And that number may be low, as many people choose not to report the crime even if they know they have been victimized.

Identity theft is "an absolute epidemic," states Robert Ellis Smith, a respected author and advocate of privacy. "It's certainly picked up in the last four or five years. It's worldwide. It affects everybody, and there's very little you can do to prevent it and, worst of all, you can't detect it until it's probably too late."

Unlike your fingerprints, which are unique to you and cannot be given to somebody else for their use, your personal data, especially your social security number, your bank account or credit card number, your telephone calling card number, and other valuable identifying data, can be used, if they fall into the wrong hands, to personally profit at your expense. In the United States and Canada, for example, many people have reported that unauthorized persons have taken funds out of their bank or financial accounts, or, in the worst cases, taken over their identities altogether, running up vast debts and committing crimes while using the victims names. In many cases, a victim's losses may include not only out-of-pocket financial losses, but substantial additional financial costs associated with trying to restore his reputation in the community and correcting erroneous information for which the criminal is responsible.

According to the FBI, identity theft is the number one fraud committed on the Internet. So how do job seekers protect themselves while continuing to circulate their resumes online? The key to a successful online job search is learning to manage the risks. Here are some tips for staying safe while conducting a job search on the Internet.

1. Check for a privacy policy.

If you are considering posting your resume online, make sure the job search site you are considering has a privacy policy, like CareerBuilder.com. The policy should spell out how your information will be used, stored and whether or not it will be shared. You may want to think twice about posting your resume on a site that automatically shares your information with others. You could be opening yourself up to unwanted calls from solicitors (推销员).

When reviewing the site's privacy policy, you'll be able to delete your resume just as easily as you posted it. You won't necessarily want your resume to remain out there on the Internet once you land a job. Remember, the longer your resume remains posted on a job board, the more exposure, both positive and not-so-positive, it will receive.

2. Take advantage of site features.

Lawful job search sites offer levels of privacy protection. Before posting your resume, carefully consider your job search objectives and the level of risk you are willing to assume.

CareerBuilder.com, for example, offers three levels of privacy from which job seekers can choose. The first is standard posting. This option gives job seekers who post their resumes the most visibility to the broadest employer audience possible.

The second is anonymous (匿名的) posting. This allows job seekers the same visibility as those in the standard posting category without any of their contact information being displayed. Job seekers who wish to remain anonymous but want to share some other information may choose which pieces of contact information to display.

The third is private posting. This option allows a job seeker to post a resume without having it searched by employers. Private posting allows job seekers to quickly and easily apply for jobs that appear on CareerBuilder.com without retyping their information.

3. Safeguard your identity.

Career experts say that one of the ways job seekers can stay safe while using the Internet to search out jobs is to conceal their identities. Replace your name on your resume with a generic (泛指的) identifier, such as "Intranet Developer Candidate," or "Experienced Marketing Representative."

You should also consider eliminating the name and location of your current employer. Depending on your title, it may not be all that difficult to determine who you are once the name of your company is provided. Use a general description of the company such as “Major auto manufacture,” or “International packaged goods supplier.”

If your job title is unique, consider using the generic equivalent instead of the exact title assigned by your employer.

4. Establish an email address for your search

Another way to protect your privacy while seeking employment online is to open up an email account specifically for your online job search. This will safeguard your existing email box in the event someone you don’t know gets hold of your email address and shares it with others.

Using an email address specifically for your job search also eliminates the possibility that you will receive unwelcome emails in your privacy mailbox. When naming your new email address, be sure that it doesn’t contain reference to your name or other information that will give away your identity. The best solution is an email address that is relevant to the job you are seeking such as salesmgr2004@provider.com.

5. Protect your references.

If your resume contains a section with the names and contact information of your references, take it out. There’s no sense in safeguarding your information while sharing private contact information of your references.

6. Keep confidential (机密的) information confidential.

Do not, under any circumstances, share your social security, driver’s license, and bank account numbers or other personal information, such as race or eye color. Honest employers do not need this information with an initial application. Don’t provide this even if they say they need it in order to conduct a background check. This is one of the oldest tricks in the book—don’t fall for it.

1. Robert Ellis Smith believes identity theft is difficult to detect and one can hardly do anything to prevent it.
2. In many cases, identity theft not only causes the victims immediate financial losses but costs them a lot to restore their reputation.
3. Identity theft is a minor offence and its harm has been somewhat overestimated.
4. It is important that your resume not stay online longer than is necessary.
5. Of the three options offered by CareerBuilder.com in Suggestion 2, the third one is apparently most strongly recommended.
6. Employers require applicants to submit very personal information on background checks.
7. Applicants are advised to use generic names for themselves and their current employers when seeking employment online.

Section A (1 point each, 10 points)

Directions: In this section, there is a passage with ten blanks. You are required to select one word for each blank from a list of choices given in a word bank following the passage. Read the passage through carefully before making your choices. Each choice in the bank is identified by a letter. Please write down the corresponding letter for each item on Answer Sheet 2. You may not use any of the words in the bank more than once.

And so I do not 21 a criminal 22. But what was most 23 at the time was the things my 24 from the 25so clearly depended on.I had the “right” accent, respectable middle-class parents in court, reliable 26, and I could obviously afford a very good solicitor.Given the27 nature of the charge,I feel sure that if I had come from a different 28 , and had really been 29 ,there is every chance that I would have been found guilty. While asking for costs to be awarded , my solicitor’s case quite obviously revolved around the fact that I had a ‘brilliant 30 record”.

A. obscure	B. staring	C. unemployed	D. shocking	E. start
F. contracting	G. have	H. argument	I. background	J. release
K. witnesses	L. charge	M. academic	N. react	O. record

Section B (2 points each, 20 points)

Directions: There are 2 passages in this section. Each passage is followed by some questions. For each of them there are four choices marked A, B, C and D. You should decide on the best choice and mark the corresponding letter on Answer Sheet 1 with a single line through the center.

Passage One

Questions 21 to 25 are based on the following passage :

The octopus’s(章鱼) reputation as a human-killer isn’t simply an exaggeration -----it is a total myth .The octopus can indeed be a deadly hunter, but only of its natural prey. Clams, mussels, crabs, lobster and an occasional sick or unwary fish have reason to be frightened of this multi-armed predator, but a person is much too large to interest even the biggest octopus, Even a giant among octopi is much smaller than most people imagine. Far from being large enough to engulf a submarine, as monster octopi in movies have been known to do, the largest octopi, found on the Pacific coast, weight around 110pounds and grow to a diameter of no more than ten feet.

The hard , parrot like beak(嘴) of an octopus is not used is not used for attacking deep-sea divers, but for cutting open crabs and lobsters. Indeed, the octopus possesses such a tiny throat that it cannot swallow large pieces of meat .It feeds instead by pouring digestive juices into its victims, and then sucking up the soupy remains. A clam or scallop that finds itself in the grasp of an octopus has only a short time to live. But human being are perfectly safe .Still, people rarely care to venture close enough to these timid creatures to get a good look at them.

21. This passage is mainly about ()
- A) the horrors of the octopus.
- B) the largest octopus in the world.
- C) octopi and their behaviour.
- D) the octopus’s deadly hunting method.
22. It is implied but not stated in the passage that ()
- A) people have groundless fears about the octopus.
- B) the octopus is not interested in human beings as its food.
- C) the octopus is afraid of human beings.
- D) the octopus is a very vicious sea animal.
23. Which of the following statements is true? ()

- A) the octopus uses its tentacles to tear its prey into pieces before eating it up.
- B) the octopus always catches sick and careless fish..
- C) the octopus never attacks people.
- D) the octopus can engulf submarines.
24. The hard beak of the octopus is used of ()
- A) attacking deep-sea.
- B) cutting up large pieces of meat.
- C) cutting open its prey
- D) defending itself.
- 25.From the passage, we can conclude that ()
- A) the octopus is not dangerous to man, as many people believe it to be
- B) people often fear creatures that are not dangerous to them
- C) things described in movies are not to be believed
- D) the octopus only hunts prey it can swallow

Passage Two

Question 26 to 30 are based on the following passage :

Do animals have right? Do tree? Do human have an obligation to behave ethically(合乎道德的) to rivers? To rocks? Viruses? The entire planet?

As this century draws to a close, these are not merely questions for abstract philosophical debate but, as Roderick Frazier Nash points out in The Rights of Nature, issues of intense interest to theologians (神 学 家), lawyers, legislators and even scientists. Radical environmentalists are already demanding that legal and ethical protection be extended to all of nature, and a few of them demonstrated a willingness to fight, break the law and even die in support of this belief.

As described by Nash, the circle covered by the ethical rules governing individual and social behavior has expanded slowly and irregularly throughout history. Starting by granting rights to themselves, humans gradually enlarged the circle to include the family, the tribe, the nation and, in theory if not in practice, the entire community of human being. When Thomas Jefferson wrote that all men were created equal and entitled to certain unalienable(不可剥夺的) rights, it was understood he was talking only about white males. Since the American Revolution, however, the right to ethical treatment has been extended, at least by law and social consensus, to include women and ethnic(民族的) minorities.

The next page in this history -----the extension of ethical and rights to animals, plants, and the rest of the natural world ----is now being written, Nash believes. For a growing number of people throughout the world but particularly in the United States, the belief is taking root.

However, as environmentalism has evolved as a social movement in recent years, Nash says, the concept of liberating nature from persecution by humanity has gained followers. U.S. law, he notes, provides legal protection to animals and plants through the Endangered Species

Act and the Marine Mammals Protection Act.

Nash points to the increasingly aggressive positions of so-called deep environmentalist and other radicals who insist that nature has intrinsic(固有的) and unalienable rights that have nothing to do with its value to people. Some of these radical have thrown themselves before bulldozers to protect virgin forests and chained themselves to rocks on a river bank to prevent the river from being dammed.

For the most part, Nash takes no position on questions of ethical duties. Only in an epilogue(跋), does he indicate where his sympathies lie. Just as the antislavery radicals in the early part of the 19th century were scorned(嘲笑) for insisting that slaves were human being with rights, today’s radical environmentalists are often laughed at for suggesting that nature is “the latest minority deserving a place in the sun of the American liberal tradition,” he says. But with the groundwork now laid for “mass participation in environmentalism,” Nash believes, there is a real possibility of serious confrontation with those who profit from exploitation of the environment.

“If this situation, with its intellectual and political similarities to America before the Civil War, promises once again to endanger domestic peace,” Nash warns,” it is not the fault of history”

26. Radical environmentalists hold that ()
- A) all of nature should enjoy legal and ethical protection
- B) all animals should have the same legal rights as human beings
- C) viruses should be eliminated from this planet
- D) nature should be exploited in a humane way
- 27.“ all men were created equal, ”Thomas Jefferson meant that ()
- A) all human beings should enjoy equal rights
- B) all white ,ales should have equal rights
- C) black and whites should enjoy equal rights
- D) men and women should have equal rights
28. According to the so-called deep environmentalists, ()
- A) things in nature that value to people should ve protected
- B) virgin forests should be preserved
- C) man should let rivers take their nature course and dams should not be built
- D) everything in nature has its intrinsic value and should be protected
29. According to the passage, Nash ()
- A) is neutral on the question concerning the ethical rights of nature
- B) sympathizes with the radical environmentalists
- C) laughs at the idea that nature deserves a place in the American liberal tradition
- D) is scornful of the antislavery radicals for insisting that slaves were human beings
30. The best title for this passage might be ()

- A) Ethics and the Natural World
- B) Antislavery Radicals and Deep environmentalists
- C) All Men Were Created Equal
- D) The Relationship Between Human Beings and Nature

Part V. Cloze (0.5 point each, 10 points)

Directions: There are 20 blanks in the following passage. For each blank there are four choices marked A, B, C and D. You should choose the ONE that best fits into the passage. Then mark the corresponding letter on Answer Sheet 1 with a single line through the center.

The part of the environmental movement that draws my firm's attention is the design of cities, buildings and products. When we designed America's first so-called "green" office building in New York two decades 41, we felt very alone. But today, thousands of people come to green building conferences, and the 42 that buildings can be good for people and the environment will be increasingly influential in years to 43.

Back in 1984 we discovered that most manufactured products for decoration weren't designed for 44 use. The "energy-efficient" sealed commercial buildings constructed after the 1970s energy crisis 45 indoor air quality problems caused by materials such as paint, wall covering and carpet. So far 20 years, we’ve been focusing on these materials 46 to the molecules, looking for ways to make them 47 for people and the planet.

Home builders can now use materials-such as paints that release significantly 48 amounts of organic compounds— that don't 49 the quality of the air, water, or soil. Ultimately, 50, our basic design strategy is focused not simply on being "less bad" but on creating 51 healthful materials that can be either safely returned to the soil 52 reused by industry again and again. As a matter of 53, the world's largest manufacturer has already 54 a carpet that is fully and safely recyclable (可循环用的).

Look at it this way: No one 55 out to create a building that destroys the planet. But our current industrial systems are 56 causing these conditions, whether we like it or not. So 57 of simply trying to reduce the damage, we are 58 a positive approach. We're giving people high-quality, healthful products and an opportunity to make choices that have a 59 effect on the world. It's not just the building industry, either. 60 cities are taking these environmentally positive approaches to design, planning and building. Portland, Seattle and Boston have said they want to be green cities. Chicago wants to be the greenest city in the world.
